

The Transition
to Adoptive
Parenthood
Project
(TAPP)

Are you in a committed relationship?

Are you planning to adopt for the first time?

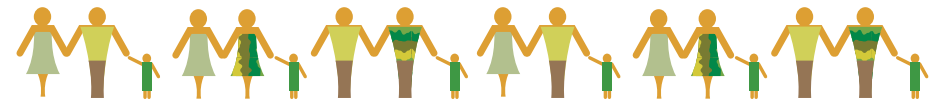

If so, we need your and your partner's help!

The Transition to Adoptive Parenthood Project (TAPP)

Abbie Goldberg, Ph.D.
Department of Psychology
Clark University
950 Main Street
Worcester, MA 01610-1477

Clark University is a teaching and research institution founded in 1887. Clark is the oldest graduate institution in the United States. Clark is one of only three New England universities, with Harvard and Yale, to be a founding member of the prestigious Association of American Universities.

The Transition to Adoptive Parenthood Project is aimed at exploring the transition to adoptive parenthood in a diverse group of families. We are asking you to help us understand your experiences as you prepare to become, and then become, parents. For example, What things make this transition easier or harder? What are your feelings about the adoption process? What are the expected and unexpected challenges and joys that you face?

Your participation is very much needed and appreciated. Couples who participate in this project will be interviewed individually either in person or by phone during the pre-adoption period, and then again three months after the adoption. As a token of appreciation, you will be paid for your participation in this project.

Please contact us for more information about the project, via phone at 508-793-7289, or by email, agoldberg@clarku.edu.

Please read about this study and Dr. Goldberg's other research on her website:
www.clarku.edu/faculty/goldberg/index.html

Call us today - your participation makes a difference!

